

Career Path of Musicianship

By: Holly McDougall

Why I chose music as my career path.

School can be boring, and I wanted to make it something fun. I chose music as my career path because it is what I want my career to be. Music has always been an inspiring part of my life, and I really want it. I can do anything I put my mind to.

Identities and Relationships

Who am I? Who are we?

Music is my identity. I love music, and I feel like I am the best at it compared to other things. Human relationships with music keep us tied to what we are focused on. If you are focused on too many things you can't give 100 percent to any of them, so I focus on one thing at a time until it's done. It's all about your mindset, and music helps me have a focused mind set.

I chose this global context because knowing you you are and who we are is really important. Especially when you have a goal. Knowing you you are is a real game changer for your mindset and how you think critically and emotionally.

Two Learning Approaches

- Communicating through music and, having social skills.

Communication is very important for many things in your day to day life. Music is all about communicating. You express yourself through music and it's lyrics no matter what vibe you are in. Socially, you have to connect with other people to produce your music. Maybe one day you get interviewed, and using social skills when communicating boosts your confidence in a way not many things do as efficiently.

- Being prepared, and doing your research.

_____ Knowing what job you are taking and the people in it is very important. You definitely do not want to get scammed in your career with music, it is very easy to get copyrighted without anyone knowing who really wrote that song. Being prepared before your job is also very important, like making sure you don't have any plans and you are prepared to be there all day. Getting to bed early can also add to an effective routine.

Why I chose those two approaches.

I chose the approaches of communication and being ready because I find those to be the two most important things when it comes to music. I utilized these two approaches every time I get in a booth and record. I know who I am dealing with, what they do with the recording, and where its going or staying. I communicate everyday with people around me even if it is as simple as asking for a pencil.

Reflection

My career project was presented to the class. I believe I did very well because I did not need to look at the slides to know what I was talking about. I knew exactly how much money is made on average, I knew the odds of being successful, I knew sturdy facts about the music industry. Like I said, knowing what you are talking about can make you seem 1,000 times more achieved than having to look at a sentence every 10 seconds that you copied off google. If I did this project again I would add more slides talking about probability, and communication. Unfortunately the presentation had a 5 minute limit, but that is no excuse. I expected my project to go as it did, I put a lot of confidence in it making it a very easy project. I learned not many people get into the music industry and it is a hard business.
