

Capstone Project

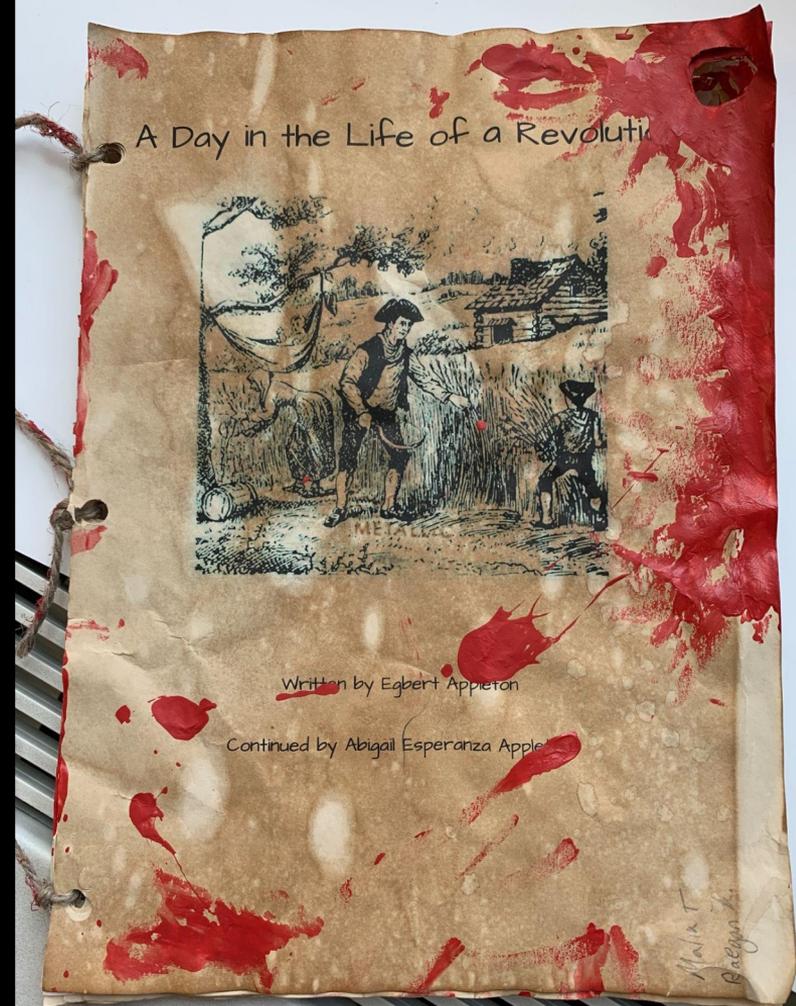

Revolutionary War Journal
By: Malia Tantengco

What is this Project?

- This project is where you had to write a journal or diary as a soldier in the revolutionary revolutionary war
- I worked with another student and we made a diary written by Egbert Appleton
- Egbert and his son Wesly had drafted to fight and the rest of their family goes along with with them
- Their family is Abigail and Egbert who are the mom and dad and their two sons, Wesly Wesly and Rudd

Picture

We were assigned to make the journal however we wanted and my partner and I made our journal from baked paper, paint, and rope.

Why this Project

- This project was very interesting and opened my mind to the past
- We got to work on focusing on the past and still use our imagination for the past. There were many different ways our imagination could have gone
- There was a lot of freedom within this project and offered a lot of creativity and was one of the writing projects that I genuinely enjoyed

Global Context

Dimensions of Time and Space- It fits into this context because we have to look back into the past. We use our knowledge of the past to work our imagination and become a part of the past through our writing.

Scientific and Technical Innovation-Another Global Context this fits into is the scientific and technical section. This is because we have to understand how the world used to work back then and applied our knowledge onto the project.

2 Approaches to Learning

Research-For this project we had to make it as historically accurate as possible. In order to make sure it fits the order of events and doesn't fall out of line we had to do our research and use the knowledge we had Communication-As you can see this project was a writing project and fit into the communication column. We had to communicate our thoughts onto paper in order for people to understand our project.

Reflection

This project was one of the more enjoyable assignments this school year. It combined our imagination with our own lessons of history. We learned more about the history and got greater depths on events that occurred. We had to better understand events in order to write accurately. If I could go back and change anything I would not change anything. It fit into my expectations and was a very well made project.
